

Note to Contributors

The Australian Journal of Labour Law is designed to be of service both to the academic community and to practitioners in labour law and labour relations. The Journal seeks to publish articles, notes and comments, and detailed commentaries upon recent cases and legislation in the field of labour law. Articles may deal with an area of labour law in an analytical, theoretical or empirical fashion. Contributions detailing or analysing the importance of recent developments in labour law, or dealing with issues of policy and reform are also welcomed. This journal is controlled by an editorial board following a formal process of peer review.

Although it is intended that the primary focus of the Journal will be upon Australian labour law, articles and other contributions on overseas developments will be considered for publication where they are of wide general interest, or of relevance to the Australian situation.

It is scheduled to publish three issues a year, three such issues constituting a volume. Contributions are sought from members of the judiciary, barristers and solicitors, arbitrators and conciliators, academics and those otherwise engaged in the labour relations field. Notes on the appropriate form and style of manuscripts submitted for publication may be found on the inside back cover.

Each contributor agrees that by submitting a manuscript to LexisNexis for publication in this journal, he or she licenses LexisNexis to publish the manuscript, altered as indicated above, in this journal and other publications in print and other forms with due attribution.

Contributions and correspondence concerning the various sections of the Journal's activities should be addressed as follows:
