

Note to Contributors

The Torts Law Journal aims to be of service both to the academic community and to practitioners, and high-quality contributions are sought from any quarter. The Journal publishes articles, notes, comments and reviews dealing with tort law and alternative compensation systems, and with other legal areas and topics that are related to or have implications for tort law and compensation systems. Analytical, theoretical and empirical approaches are all welcome, as are contributions detailing and analysing recent developments or dealing with issues of policy and law reform.

The Journal is not limited in its coverage to Australian law. Contributions dealing with the law of other jurisdictions or which take a comparative approach are encouraged.

This is a refereed journal and the content is controlled by an editorial board following a formal process of peer review. Each annual volume consists of three issues. Notes on the appropriate form and style of manuscripts submitted for publication may be found in the Style Guidelines in this issue.

By submitting a manuscript for publication in this Journal, the contributor licenses LexisNexis to publish the manuscript, as approved by the Editorial Board following the peer review process, in this Journal, and in other publications in print or electronic form with due attribution. In submitting your manuscript you warrant that it is your original work, that you have the right to grant the licence to LexisNexis as above, and that you have appropriately referenced any third party material used in your manuscript. You warrant that the manuscript is not defamatory and does not infringe the intellectual property or moral rights of any other person or constitute a breach of privacy, breach of confidence or passing off or a contravention of any other private right or law.
